Marketing Manager's Corner

Marketing Manager's Corner: In Memoriam......

Recently in Roselle, we experienced the loss of someone who was a fixture of the community: Maryann Grygiel. Maryann dedicated her life to serving and helping others with a variety of organizations, causes, and events. Her impact on the community was immeasurable, and may have encouraged so many groups to "get things done"! Though we will miss her dearly, we are grateful for the goodness she shared with so many and her sheer determination to make her community and the world a better place.

A new memorial garden was recently christened on RHM's campus to honor longtime museum member Hank Kvintus. Lake Park student Anthony Johnson planned and constructed the garden over the summer as a project for Eagle Scout Troop 95. The space is a fond tribute to Hank, who nurtured a love for gardening over many years.

In mid-August, family and friends of Hank gathered with the Museum and Green Roselle to celebrate the dedication of his garden and bench on the museum campus. Hank was a director at the RHM. We thank Anthony and all those who helped create this beautiful tribute to Hank for their dedication to the project! We invite anyone in the community who knew and loved Hank to visit and enjoy this garden in his honor. Hank was not only a driving force and dear friend to the museum, but many other Roselle groups as well.

We have also recently said goodbye to several Roselle residents who will be missed by their community. Linda Johannes was a longtime museum member and supporter. She passed away on July 20. Carol France, founder and dedicated volunteer of the Kiwanis Club of Roselle/ Bloomingdale, passed away on July 21. She called Roselle home since 1983 and loved seeing how the town progressed over the years. And, Lewis Kortas, a resident of Roselle for 22 years, passed away on August 2nd. He was active in the Post 1084 American Legion as an member. May all of their memories be a blessing.

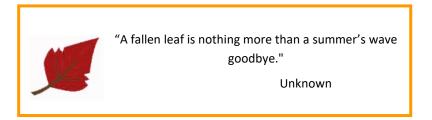

Community members gathered to share memories of Hank Kvintus.

From the Museum Manager's Desk

As we move into Fall, I would like to take a minute to count our blessings. We were very fortunate, this summer, to have Tess Binder of Schaumburg with us as a museum apprentice.

She was of immense help with exhibits. Her vision and expertise made exhibit creation and curation a thing of beauty! We hope Tess will be back on her winter break to work more of her magic! Thank you, Tess!

We are also grateful for our longtime volunteers Philip and Jason Sullivan. Their vision and expertise were essential in creating an Indigenous Peoples exhibit.

Please visit us to see this — it will remain up through Christmas for your enjoyment. Thank you, Philip, and Jason!

Also, please welcome our newest volunteer, Dylan Hanzel. Dylan has had family in Roselle since the 1970's. He brings with him many talents, such as exhibit help, office expertise and an enthusiasm for history that is catching! Welcome in and thank you Dylan!

We are still looking for gardeners and docents – so if you love to garden, we have expansive grounds that would love to be under your care. There are three larger gardens and two smaller gardens. We are also in need of docents once a week on Sundays from 2-4pm. Please let us know if you would like to volunteer by

""Harmless Drudges: The Unexpected Revolution That Is Reference Material"

It is odd to think that someone wrote the dictionary. Or the encyclopedia, for that matter. While these efforts are collaborative, it still seems strange to think that there were, and are, individuals sitting down and writing them. From today's perspective, the act seems mundane since we are so used to the idea of these works. Thinking about them further, however, makes it clear that these were revolutionary ideas. Prior to the Enlightenment period, and especially prior to the invention of movable type, books like these would not have been necessary or even viable. Differences in dialect would make it so that a person would often not be able to communicate with a person who lived a few dozen miles away. In that scenario, what good would a dictionary be? As for an encyclopedia, what would a plowman need to know about the economy of a city 500 miles away?

With the advent of movable type and the Enlightenment emphasis on the importance of knowledge, suddenly these books not only became possible but incredibly useful. This meant that the earliest versions, while crude by our standards, were revolutionary enough to make their creators famous in their day and at least recognizable today, even if you are not sure why you know the name. Denis Diderot, leader of the effort to produce one of the first encyclopedias, aroused both admiration and controversy for his efforts to produce the work. Suspicious authorities even raided his home at several points during the process for fear that he was producing sedition.

Even more fascinating was the work of Samuel Johnson. Johnson, collaborating with a small team, finished the first widely accepted English dictionary in roughly eight years. Noting that a team of 40 French writers were working on a French dictionary at the same time and expected to take 40 years, Johnson noted that this reflected the relative ability of an Englishman to a Frenchman. One of Johnson's main contributions was that his dictionary included the use of literary references to illustrate the definition of a word. Johnson's dictionary also showed an academic rigor that previous dictionaries generally lacked as he tried to cover all the possible meanings of a word. The entry for "put" ran to three pages long and the one for "take" ran to five pages.

Despite this, Johnson's personality is evident throughout, to the work's benefit and its detriment. Since the field of etymology was in its infancy, some of his definitions and their origins relied on guess work. When questioned on how he came to define a certain word, he admitted that he found the definition in pure ignorance. Additionally, some of the entries take on what would be seen as a whimsical tone today. Oats is defined as "a grain which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people." A lexicographer was defined in part as a "harmless drudge."

Perhaps the most shocking thing about Johnson's fame is that he became so famous that his biographer became famous in his own right. James Boswell's main claim to fame is that he was Johnson's friend. While he wrote feverishly throughout his life, the only two things he wrote that gained any notice were a travel memoir of a trip he took with Johnson and the biography of Johnson. After his death, the letters he exchanged with Johnson were read by scholars. Aside from that, he was the butt of jokes throughout his life and since. Johnson's other friends openly mocked this strange nobleman, and scholars have since include stories about him as humorous asides during works examining more serious topics. Boswell saw himself as a distinguished philosophe, a highly respected intellectual and a sought-after lothario. Others have seen him as an intellectual lightweight whose romantic "conquests" were of a pecuniary nature. All of this shows how wildly popular and revolutionary the dictionary was seen however. Unlike other would-be philosophe's, Boswell happened to be friends with the man who wrote the dictionary. It is remarkable to think we are still talking about him two and a half centuries later on the strength of that.
